

AFFIRMATIVE: The issues of the CEO are justified and necessary for the success of the company

AFFIRMATIVE: The issues of the CEO are justified and necessary for the success of the company

Pros	Cons
<ul style="list-style-type: none">- The CEO is breaking into children's houses and scaring them to prevent the company from going under.<ul style="list-style-type: none">- The CEO is also doing this to protect his workers from losing a job or worse getting contaminated by children.- Scream extraction machines would revolutionize the scaring industry.- Assist in the energy crisis.- Took drastic measures for his family/company reputation.<ul style="list-style-type: none">- In his family for 3 generations.- Pressure from society to supply power.- The CEO is an innovator, he's the only party that steps up to find a solution to the energy crisis.<ul style="list-style-type: none">- Where were other solutions to this problem?- Not letting harmful toxins that he believes can hurt the monsters and kill the entire population- There are less unpredictable and dangerous variables involved.- Advance his company ahead of his competitors.<ul style="list-style-type: none">- He doesn't have time to find more ethical solutions because he needs to stay competitive.- Regardless his decisions were influenced by Randy.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">- Many monsters are out of jobs. -no more scarers- Could have been tested in a safer environment.- What matters more a company or the safety of all monsters?- Could have conducted research into a better understanding of humans and their world● In our society, we are hurting our planet by burning fossil fuels even though we have alternative measures for power. In the future, burning fossil fuels may be seen as unethical and unnecessary just as screams became outdated at the end of the movie.

Questions:

- What would you have done in the CEO's position with the pressure of the shareholders and an energy crisis?
- How would they have learned about laughter without sacrificing critical corporate funds?